Lawrence W. Reed

18 March 2009

Larry Reed is president of the Foundation for Economic Education (FEE), the nation's oldest free enterprise think tank, founded by the late Leonard Read in 1946 and headquartered in Irvington, NY. FEE is publisher of the acclaimed journal, The Freeman.

Prior to becoming the president of FEE in September 2008, Mr. Reed was president of the Mackinac Center for Public Policy in Michigan for 20 years. He has authored more than 1,000 articles and commentaries in national and local newspapers, magazines and journals in the U.S. and abroad. His famous speech, "Seven Principles of Sound Public Policy" has been translated into a dozen languages and in 2004 he delivered it to several hundred students and faculty at People's University in Beijing, China. His economic and political interests have taken him to 69 countries on six continents since 1985.

Mr. Reed holds degrees in economics and history from Grove City College and Slippery Rock University in Pennsylvania and honorary PhDs from Central Michigan University and Northwood University in Michigan. He taught economics and chaired the department of economics at Northwood University.
